The second half of this session reflects on the disruptions which took place mid-2023 around the taxi, and where – if any - inroads have been made to recognise and bring this important economic sector into alignment with both public and private partners. In recognising this, certain municipalities are upping their game to provide information. However, how real is “semigration” to the Western Cape? And how do we plan as a province for development in all-important nodes such as the forecasted influx in educational needs over the next few years; how can the private sector partner with government on this? And, most importantly, how long does it take to accumulate reliable data and what is already available out there for the development community to make plans for future needs and economic growth?
